

THE PRACTICE FREEDOM AUDIT

How to Create a Private Practice That Supports Your Income, Energy and Future...

Without Seeing 25–30 Clients Forever.

*Because YOU don't need to do more.
YOU need to align what you already have.*

You Built the Practice. Now Let's Make Sure You Can Stay In It.

I created this audit because there was a time when my practice looked successful from the outside. My caseload was full. I was helping people. I was building a team. I was making money.

But underneath all of that, my practice required too much of me to keep working. I was seeing 25–30 clients a week, handling admin, billing, claims, and eventually managing a growing team on top of it.

And for a long time, I thought the answer was to do something else. Another platform. Another offer. Coaching. Courses. Something that would finally give me more freedom.

What I eventually realized was that I didn't necessarily need another business.

I needed to build the one I already had differently.

That is what this guide is designed to help you begin doing.

As you move through it, you'll look at four areas of your practice:

Capacity. Income. Dependence. Future Fit.

Not so you can fix everything today.

But so you can see what may be making your current practice difficult to sustain—and identify the first thing that needs your attention.

As you go through this audit, remember:

The goal isn't to stop being a therapist.

The goal is to have choices about what being a therapist looks like.

Your practice should work for you, too!

To your success!

Your Practice Freedom Snapshot

BEFORE WE START: HOW FREE DOES YOUR PRACTICE ACTUALLY FEEL?

A full calendar does not automatically mean you built a sustainable practice.
Answer each question honestly. Right now...

My average number of clients per week

The number I would actually prefer to see each week

Average number of days I work each week

Ideal number of days I want to work

When I take time off, my income:

☐ Mostly continues

☐ Drops somewhat

☐ Drops significantly

☐ Stops almost completely

If I were unavailable for one week, my practice would:

☐ Continue running well

☐ Need some attention

☐ Begin falling behind

☐ Mostly stop

The part of my practice that feels hardest to maintain right now is:

If nothing changed over the next five years, I would feel:

Your maximum capacity should not become your business model.

AREA 1 Capacity

COULD YOU KEEP WORKING AT THIS PACE FOR ANOTHER 10 YEARS?

Capacity is not just about what you can do. It is about what you can realistically and willingly maintain without constantly borrowing energy from the rest of your life.

Your Capacity Check

Sessions you are currently seeing each week

During your busiest weeks, that increases to

How do you typically feel by the end of your clinical week?

☐ Energized☐ Fine☐ Tired but manageable☐ Drained☐ Need recovery time

If money were not the deciding factor, how many clients would you genuinely want to see each week?

Reflect

Am I seeing this number of clients because it fits my capacity — or because I believe I financially have to?

What parts of my current schedule feel sustainable?

What parts feel like I am pushing past my actual capacity?

Capacity Freedom Score

My score: / 10

1 = I cannot maintain this pace much longer.

10 = This workload feels sustainable long-term.

AREA 2 Income

WHAT HAPPENS FINANCIALLY WHEN YOU WORK LESS?

A practice can generate good revenue and still leave the owner feeling trapped by the amount of clinical work required to maintain it.

If you went from 25 clients a week to 18 next month, what would happen?

☐ Nothing major

☐ A few adjustments

☐ Significant drop

☐ I don't know

How much of my current income depends directly on me attending sessions?

☐ Less than half

☐ About half

☐ Most of it

☐ Almost all of it

Taking a week off financially feels:

☐ Easy

☐ Manageable

☐ Stressful

☐ Almost impossible

Money Behavior Check — which thoughts sound familiar?

☐ "I can't raise my rates."

☐ "I need to accept everyone."

☐ "I feel guilty charging more."

☐ "I need another panel just in case."

☐ "I can't afford time off."

☐ "I should see more clients."

☐ "If I reduce my caseload, I won't make enough."

☐ "Maybe I need another income stream."

Which belief has had the biggest influence on the way I built my practice?

What has that belief caused me to do?

What might change if I stopped treating that belief like a fact?

You can change the spreadsheet and recreate the same problem if the behavior underneath it never changes.

AREA 3 Dependence

WHAT HAPPENS IF YOU DISAPPEAR FOR SEVEN DAYS?

This is not a test of whether you are a “good” business owner. It is simply a way to see how dependent the practice currently is on you.

If I completely stepped away for seven days...

Client inquiries would	☐ Keep moving	☐ Slow down	☐ Stop
Billing would	☐ Continue	☐ Need some help	☐ Stop
Scheduling would	☐ Continue	☐ Need me occasionally	☐ Stop
Client communication would	☐ Be handled	☐ Partially be handled	☐ Wait for me
Marketing/referral activity would	☐ Continue	☐ Slow down	☐ Stop
Problems would	☐ Resolve without me	☐ Mostly wait	☐ Completely pile up

What are the top three things in my practice that currently require me but probably should not?

1

2

3

Dependence Freedom Score
My score: / 10

1 = Everything depends on me.
10 = The practice can function without my constant involvement.

AREA 4 Future Fit

DID YOU BUILD TODAY'S PRACTICE ONLY FOR TODAY'S VERSION OF YOU?

Your practice should be able to evolve because you will. Think beyond next month.

What do you want private practice to look like in 3 years? In 5 years? In 10 years?

What might change? In the future, I may want to:

☐ See fewer clients

☐ Work fewer days

☐ Travel more

☐ Longer vacations

☐ Become a caregiver

☐ More time with family

☐ Supervise clinicians

☐ Lead a team

☐ Reduce clinical work

☐ Boutique practice

☐ Sell/transition out

☐ Retire

☐ Not sure yet

Is the practice I am building today capable of supporting that future?

☐ Yes

☐ Partially

☐ No

☐ Haven't thought about it

If I no longer wanted to see 20–30 clients every week, what would have to change?

What do I want my practice to give me besides income?

The goal isn't to stop being a therapist. The goal is to have choices about what being a therapist looks like.

Your Practice Freedom Reset

CHOOSE YOUR BIGGEST SUSTAINABILITY GAP

Look back at everything you completed. Which area needs your attention first?

☐ CAPACITY My workload is difficult to maintain.

☐ INCOME My income depends too heavily on keeping my clinical volume high.

☐ DEPENDENCE Too much of the business requires me personally.

☐ FUTURE FIT My current practice does not match the life or career I want long-term.

My biggest gap right now is:

What specifically feels unsustainable here?

What is ONE thing I could reduce, stop, simplify, or change this month?

What system, support, decision, or boundary would make this easier to sustain?

Your 7-Day Practice Freedom Audit

For the next seven days, notice: What drains me? What requires me unnecessarily? What only works because I keep pushing? What would stop if I stepped away? Do not try to fix everything.

At the end of seven days, the biggest pattern I noticed was:

The first thing I am going to address is:

Don't fix everything. Start with the thing making your practice hardest to sustain.

Your Practice Freedom Commitment

YOU DO NOT NEED TO ESCAPE THE PRACTICE. YOU MAY NEED TO REDESIGN IT.

One thing I am no longer willing to maintain just because “this is how I've always done it”:

One change I am committing to over the next 30 days:

What I want that change to create more room for:

My Permission Slip

I give myself permission to let go of what drains me and build in a way I can actually sustain.

My goal is not to do more. It's to build a practice that works better.

Remember: You don't need to do more.

You need to do what matters.

NOW GO REDESIGN YOUR PRACTICE.
